PLOWS! PLOWS!! PLOWS!!!

THE SHORTEST WAY HOME. The snortest way by half a mile-

Is up the road, across the strie, And through the mendow. Shall we try it? The days were not without a charm When, talking soft and looking silly,

My love and I walked arm in arm, The lanes were lone and fields were stilly We found so many things to say, That always, in the shiny weather,

About the weather, I suppose, The crops, the harvest, and the untion. At all events, although the talk Was neither wise por witty, We ended each successive walk With "Home already—what a pity!"
We might have lost a little ground Through coming by the road selected,

Can life's experiment support . The paradox that love proposes? Does any path seem very short, Unless it be a path of roses? We seldom find the nearest way, And if we hit upon and take it, By creeping on from day to day,

It seems as long as length can make it. The road to fame is never brief. The way to wealth is dull and dreary; All earthly routes, in my belief, Are very long and very weary, Nay-one that leads through care and strife Is short, when mortals once begin it; We take the "near cut," out of life, Although we take the longest in it. -Tinsley's Magazin

How a Wife Saved Her Husband. A Story with a Moral for the Times.

[From the Chicago Tribune.] There is a profound philosophy in Saxe Holm's little story of "How One Woman Kept Her Husband" worthy of consideration by every woman who hopes (and what good woman does not?) to reform or influence any man. The tale runs thus: Mrs. John Gray way a faithful, affectionate, but rather undemonstrative wife. John Gray was an easy good-natured man, a kind husband, a fond father of five children. Into the contented, perhaps prosaic, atmosphere of this family circle came one of Mrs. Gray's early friends, Emma Long, now
